Introductory Shiatsu Weekends

These courses are ideal for anyone wanting to find out more about shiatsu. Many people also use them to decide if they want to study shiatsu as a career on our three year practitioner training course.

Practical and hands-on

- Learn to give a simple full body shiatsu which you can give to friends and family.
- How shiatsu can be used for your self development.

Learning Shiatsu

The Devon School of Shiatsu offers a unique training, teaching healing on all four levels of a human being; physical and energetic, emotional, mental, and spiritual. We primarily contact and work with the 'ki' or energy flow within the person, using primarily finger and palm pressure, which then affects the physical body and its functioning. This makes shiatsu a very flexible form of healing able to help people on many levels. Shiatsu is received while wearing loose clothing.

As one of the most exciting forms of energetic healing today, shiatsu is gaining wide popularity for its many benefits. As it matures as a complementary therapy, it is widely used to heal physical problems like back pain and frozen shoulder, sports injuries and aiding in healthy pregnancy and childbirth. It can be of great benefit in the relief of pain and other symptoms associated with chronic or terminal health conditions and as a form of emotional work through the body.

Who studies shiatsu?

People from a wide variety of backgrounds choose to study shiatsu. Some already have a career and are looking for a more fulfilling line of work, these have included nurses, midwives and others from orthodox medicine, people who already practice a complementary medicine such as massage or reflexology and other people who are interested in a new career after raising children.

No particular prior educational qualifications are needed.

The thing that nearly all students come looking for is a new way of looking at health and life and a genuine desire to use this knowledge to help others.

"I found this course inspiring, practical and very well paced. Flexible to the groups' interest and ability. An excellent course!"

David
